The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced at the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

THE CRICKET

Perhaps we can, without hurting the feelings of anyone, or without arousing their wrath and indignation, devote a little space to our County Correspondents. These people, the Correspondents, seem to be sufficiently wide awake to gather together a great quantity of the doings of their neighborhood in a week, so why can't they become just a little more wide awake and tell us something new. Every week we read that "Mr. and Mrs. S and So and little son, Master Blank So and So, spent Sunday afternoon in Enterprise." Another tells us that Mr. Dolittle, (who lives fully three miles distant from this thriving metropolis) "took a flying trip to Napanee last week." We run our eye down the column and find that Mrs. Bush Blank Sundayed at her Uncle's. One would think that Mr. Woodrow Wilson was running these columns to see the newly found words in them. Perhaps someone can tell us when the Sabbath became a verb! Through out the County there ought to be sufficient exciting and interesting news to make the columns devoted to the County Correspondence more interesting. Surely somewhere there ought to be spice for the pie. Just a talk about the notes in the columns of the contemporary, "The Beaver." Take for instance the Newburgh correspondents startling discovery that someone who had been absent from that city for forty years, only a bit short of half a century, who came back to "renew acquaintance" found many changes! We were much surprised to hear that any changes had taken place in that place in forty years. We also registered much surprise to learn that the old folks have gone, some of them, the young folks weren't young any longer, and that the children were not the same bunch that used to break their neighbors windows forty years ago. Strange how things go on in this vale of tears, isn't it? Maybe the Newburgh Correspondent would tell us if his ancient friend was surprised to hear that the old town had passed away. Break it gently to your friend and tell us the effect it has on him. Also ask him if he knows that steam boats and trains have come into quite common use! However, we will say for the Newburgh Correspondent, although he does write in a contemporary paper, that the ranks among the first, if not the very first of County Correspondents. Some of our own correspondents might take a few points from him. They must take a "correspondent's" point. The Editor is quite satisfied, we presume, with the way the correspondents are going now, but there is room for improvement, it must be admitted. While there is room for improvement, improve, and quick!

We have been wondering what the proper adjective is that should apply to a man who lays off his employees for a day now and then as a holiday and pays them pay for the day they were laid off? ? ? Doesn't a thing like that sound pretty small?

Is it always a prosecution that goes on in a Police Court, or is it sometimes a persecution?

There are other places than Newburgh that are in the dry belt this year!

The time is coming when we will be put to the test. Will you be ridden with the yoke of drink again? or will you not? Some people have been heard to say that only the "fussy" ones, and the old "fogies" were in favor of Prohibition. We know many people who are neither, but who are the country's most valuable citizens, who are upholding the movement towards prohibition. There are not only a few of them, but the majority of the Side are those people, but no matter what the outward appearance of a man or woman is who fights for this noble cause, on the inside they are the people who will make the country a success! And although the Man-in-favour-of-drink may think that these people are doing him an injury, or any injustice, they are rendering the greatest of services to humanity. They put down Home Wreckers, Drunkards, Poverty, Filth, Vice, and lift up the other things when they work with all their might and energy against Drink. We will admit that many things have been done from time to time, to make them appear ridiculous, we will admit that there might have been people who knew nothing about either side of the story who worked for the Temperance party for selfish motives, or for the sake of appearances, who have done the party harm, but forget all this to that which is just and right, protect all coming generations against the misery that this generation has known through the curse of drink. Don't let your fellowmen down; because they haven't enough enough to help themselves, don't leave them to go their own way. Help down a helping hand and help him up to the broader path, the land that you reach down is your vote.

A very fine attempt has been made by the present council to repair our roads to make them a credit to the town. Perhaps, it must be admitted, a little more could have been done on them in certain parts of the town, but they did in a very creditable condition as it is. Some people are inclined to think though, that Napanee, like the road to hell, "is paved with good intentions."

The Cricket has been a holiday during all the rest of the populace, and the thing we noticed most on our return was the good, clean, decent, substantial, pretty appearance of our whole town. If there happens to be a people who is "fed up" with a hamlet, let him go away anywhere to any other town, for just a few days, and when he comes back, ask him how he likes our town. He'll tell you that no city, town, or village that he has been in could take the place of Napanee; no city chimes can compare with the mellow tones of our old "town clock"; that he was never so glad to get anywhere in his life as he is to get back to Napanee; he'll tell you that there is no good looking bright as Napanee gossip; that no dogs bark as loud as Napanee dogs; that no roosters crow so early as Napanee roosters; that no liquor license inspector is such a "busy" man as ours; that no town is so neglected by the "powers that be" as Napanee; and that no town does so little for the children as Napanee; but anyway he's mighty glad to get back. The old rut looks good to him.

To all outward appearances we are as dormant as ever in some respects. Our railroad crossings (of which we spoke some weeks ago) are just the same. They are as dangerous and awkward as the day the road first ran through here. If you went away from this town for forty years you certainly wouldn't notice any changes, and what changes had taken place would in all likelihood have been forced upon us. When our tinged hair grows gray and our beard sweeps the third button of our waistcoat, when our buildings begin to fall into decay, and the river has grown solid with weeds, some years after all this, some energetic citizen, who will upon our board of management, may effect a change, and those who do not use airplanes may cross the railroad in safety. Will it be that long?

Teach the Children to Save

Habits are acquired early in life. Children, who are taught the value of money and the habit of saving, grow up into good business men and capable women.

The easiest way to teach children to save, is to start a Savings Account for each child ($1.00 each is sufficient). After a child has saved another dollar to make an additional deposit, he or she will have a better appreciation of just what a dollar stands for, and how much work and self-denial it represents.

HAPSBURGS MUST GO

Allied Supreme Council Takes Decided Stand.

The Dynasty Has Been Responsible For Too Many Calamities to be Trusted With Power — Any Power, and the Archduke Joseph Will Not Be Tolerated as Dictator—New Government Must Reflect Popular Wish.

PARIS, Aug. 26. — The Supreme Council sent the following note to the Hungarian Government on Saturday, in which announcement was made that the council would have no dealings with a Government headed by Archduke Joseph or any other member of the Hapsburg family:

"The allied and associated powers have been further considering information derived from our reports, and from other sources, as to the present events in Budapest. Their decisions are as follows:—

"They are most anxious to conclude a durable peace with the Hungarian people, but they feel that this cannot be done while the present Hungarian Government is in power. That Government came into existence not by the will of the people, but by a coup d'etat carried out by a small body of police under the protection of a foreign army.

"It has at its head a member of the House of Hapsburg, whose policies and actions were largely responsible for the calamities under which the world is suffering and will long suffer. A peace negotiated by such a Government is not likely to be lasting; nor can the allied and associated Governments give the economic support which Hungary needs.

"It is only just to make Archduke Joseph disappeared before approaching the allied and associated Governments to submit his claims to the test of popular elections we must reply that his procedure cannot be satisfactory if the election is to be carried out under the auspices of the administration which the archduke himself controls.

"The differences in the way of obtaining by election of a faithful reflection of the popular will are in the present unhappy state of Hungary more serious. They would no overwhelming if an election were carried out under Hapsburg influences. But if an assembly elected under such circumstances were really representative no one would think so.

"In the interest therefore of European peace the allied and associated Governments mean to insist that the present claimant to the leadership of the Hungarian state should resign and that a Government in which all parties are represented should appeal to the Hungarian people.

"The allied and associated powers would be prepared to negotiate with any Government which possessed the confidence of an assembly so elected."

The note was signed by Premier Clemenceau.

Traitor to Be Tried.

LONDON, Aug. 26. — The first of the dramatic military trials growing out of the war will begin here next Monday morning before the Sixth Paris Court-Martial, when Gaston Quien, a French resident of St. Quentin, will be on the charge of having denounced to the German authorities the heroic nurse, Edith Cavell.

The trial probably will last eight days, and among the fifty-eight witnesses called is Brand Whitlock, United States Ambassador to Belgium.

Mr. Whitlock, it will be recalled, made many personal attempts to have Nurse Cavell reprieved. Despite the German promise to reconsider her case, Nurse Cavell was taken out one morning and shot.

The prosecution claims that it will prove that after obtaining funds and help from the British nurses, Quien went to Holland and returned to Brussels as a German agent and betrayed her to the German commandant.

M. D'Armon, attorney for the defence, will ask for an indefinite postponement until such time as the Kaiser and other parties primarily responsible for the death of Miss Cavell are arraigned.

VOTE ON PROHIBITION

Sir William Hearst Makes an Announcement

People Will Go to the Polls Some Time Between October 1st and 22nd, and the Premier of Ontario Has Placed Himself on Record as Being In Favor of the Ontario Temperance Act.

BRANTFORD, Aug. 26. — In the prohibition fight Premier Sir William Hearst throws his votes and personal influence are with the drys. He declared his position in an address at the Conservative rally in Mohawk Park Saturday, before the electors of North and South Oxford, North and South Brant, North and South Norfolk and Haldimand. Undoubtedly, he said, the Ontario Temperance Act has added much to the fighting strength of the province in war days and had proven a boon in the period of reconstruction. What had proven of benefit in the stress of war and reconstruction must be beneficial in the days of peace and prosperity which lay ahead.

"Someone has asked me my personal position with regard to the referendum," he continued. "No one who has followed my actions need ask that question. From first to last there has been no doubt as to my position, no wavering in the course the Government of which I am the head has pursued with regard to the Ontario Temperance Act. I stood by it in its inception, and I will stand by it until its fate is decided. I believe it has accomplished much good for the people of the province. The Ontario Temperance Act, in my opinion, increased our efficiency and generally added to the fighting strength of the province in war time. It has proved beneficial in the days of turmoil and reconstruction. Any change in that act now would, I believe, be unwise. What has proved a source of strength in the days of war and reconstruction would, I believe, prove a boon in the days of peace and prosperity to come. While these are my personal views, I am free to admit that many are conscientiously as myself entertain entirely different views. They are just as entitled to their views as I am."

Sir William announced that the referendum vote would be taken some time between October 1 and October 22, depending upon the time of completion of the voters' lists. He had no information to offer as to the probable date of an election, but by own remarks and those of Hon. Mr. Macdiarmid and Hon. Mr. McPherson left no doubt in the minds of the audience assembled that one was impending.

NEW CABINET FORMED.

Davidovitch Heads the Government at Belgrade.

BELGRADE, Aug. 26.—The creation of a new Cabinet proved no surprise. A final attempt Saturday to form a coalition between the Democrats in conjunction with the old Radicals' party failed. Davidovitch was forced to make a coalition with the Socialists, the new Cabinet has twelve Democrats, three Socialists, one Independent and the Minister of War, Vassitch.

Three Cabinet positions for the Socialists seems many, since they have only three representatives in the Parliament. But Davidovitch needed a majority, and made this big offer in the hope that the Socialists' Foreign Ministries are in the hands of the Democrats. Davidovitch is Premier. The new Ministry of the Interior goes to Vyshkovitch, a Democrat pre-mier, made as a condition of a coalition that this Ministry must go to the old Radicals. Thus the six cabinet controversy attempts at a concentration Cabinet were shattered.

Ljuba Jovanovitch, powerful member of the Democratic party, as Minister of the Interior, will oversee the coming election of the assembly. Marinkovitch will be Minister of Communications, and as the question of transportation is most important, the Ministry has been divided by a very able man. Poliak returns to his old position as Minister of Agrarian Reform, while Nastitch has consolidated the Ministry of Agriculture. This also is a very important position because of the drastic land reforms now planned. Protitch, an independent, now in Paris, is made Minister of Foreign Affairs.

PRINCE OPENED FAIR

Enthusiastic Reception to Heir to the Throne.

Record Gathering for the First Monday of the Canadian National Exhibition Witnessed the Formal Ceremonies—"I Promise Always to be Worthy of Canadian Friendship and Trust," Says Prince of Wales.

TORONTO, Aug. 26.—In the history of the Toronto National Exhibition, Monday, August 25, will always be remembered as a red letter day. The greatest crowd that ever gathered in the grounds for the first Monday of the fair assembled to see the Prince of Wales press the mystical button that sets the exhibition in motion. The weather conditions were perfect, and long before noon, the crowd looked very much like one of the record-breaking mobs that come out on Labor Day. The gathering was enthusiastic as well as large, and the Prince of Wales was accorded a greeting that obviously moved him. As he said in his speech in his spontaneous and boyish way, "Your greeting has touched me enormously."

The prince arrived at the grounds shortly before one o'clock. He was accompanied by the royal suite and by Lieutenant-Governor Sir John Hendrie. He was met by President Russell, and the official guard of honor, consisting of a hundred veterans of the 10th Royal Grenadiers, under the command of Major-Dunconson. Great crowds of people lined the roadway, but a slight shower of rain, which fortunately lasted only about ten minutes, marred his arrival.

All the official speech-making took place in the directors' luncheon. President Russell spoke of the feeling of affection which Canadians entertained for the heir apparent. The queen who had returned from overseas told stories of his devoted and unassuming service during the war which made all the people in this country love him.

The prince replied that he hoped always to be regarded by Canadians as a Canadian. He was deeply touched by associated with the fighting men from the Dominion that he felt like part of the people to the country. He told a short anecdote of meeting a woman on the station of a little town near Ottawa. She came up to him and shook his hand with the remark "My husband met you at the front." After telling the story, the prince added that he trusted Canadians to feel towards him as he felt towards them. He added, "I promise you always to be worthy of Canadian friendship and Canadian trust."

The formal ceremony of opening the Exhibition was very short. President Russell did not read the address, remarking that the prince had to go through enough formalities. The prince came forward to the edge of the stand, which was decorated with flags and bunting, and declared the exhibition open in a few words. A brilliant oration could not have roused any more enthusiasm than the crowd displayed after his speech. Cheer after cheer followed, and the prince was kept so busy responding to the ovation that he could not leave the stand for fully as quarter of an hour.

His tour of the grounds which followed suggested scenes out of a triumph. People cheered him, and if his conveyance stopped even for a moment, they pressed in to shake hands with the young man and to express their affection for him and their loyalty. The climax came when he entered the grand stand for a short view of the afternoon show. The enthusiasm became tumultuous, and at last when the prince moved away towards the water front to embark for the Yacht Club he must have realized more fully the truth of his own words uttered at the luncheon that "Toronto proved itself in the war to be one of the bulwarks of the British Empire."

TORONTO, Aug. 26.—With 4500 head on sale yesterday at the Union Yards there was a good demand for all classes of butcher cattle, with the bulk of the offerings well sold out before noon. There was a steady industry for the better class of butcher cows, and good heavyweight steers.

Taken on the whole and in view of the relatively heavy run, together with the sort of semi-holiday air prevailing, we cannot look upon the trading as otherwise than very satisfactory. There were some who thought that the market might well be credited with an advance of 25c to 50c, but we are not think so, but there was certainly a good all-round steady trade, with a fair good class of buyers present to steady for the balance of the week.

For Monday and Tuesday's loading the packers are paying 20c to the farmer, 20¾c f.o.b., 21¾c fed, and 20½c weighed off.

To Keep Barnyard Sanitary.

In building a barnyard, first provide for drainage and then put in a filling of gravel or cinders. Soft coal ashes from a factory are a good material, but cinders from a railway locomotive are better. Such a yard will seldom or never be muddy, and it can be kept clean and sanitary.

Coop for Shipping Poultry.

When shipping poultry for breeding purposes it is best to use a good coop (preferably one made for the purpose) large enough so that the birds can be comfortable, and high enough so that they can stand erect without injuring their combs.

Scott's Profession.

"What was Sir Walter Scott's profession?" asks Mr. Birrell. "Was it that of a man of letters who chanced to be called to the bars or of a man of law who wrote the Waverley Novels?" The question will be a startling one to a number of people who were under the impression that Scott was simply the novelist, and now find themselves quite unfamiliar with the lawyer. Mr. Birrell answers it to his own complete satisfaction, by pointing out that Scott was called to the Scottish bar six years before "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" was written, and thirteen years before the first Waverley Novel appeared. From 1806 to 1830 Scott was a clerk in the Court of Sessions, which entailed almost daily attendance, while the court was sitting. Those who want to learn about Scott as a lawyer—in all he gave judgment in 114 cases—cannot do better than read what Mr. Chisholm has to say on the subject in his book, "Scott's Occasions in the Sheriff Court of Selkirk," just published.

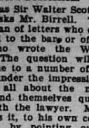
THE JOY OF MOTHERHOOD

Came to this Woman after Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Restore Her Health

Ellensburg, Wash.—"After I was married I was not well for a long time and a good deal of the time was not able to go about. Our greatest desire was to have a child in our home and one day my husband came back from Spokane with a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I wanted me to try it. It brought relief from my troubles.



I improved in health so I could do my housework; we now have a little one, all of which I owe to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. O. S. JOHNSON, R. No. 3, Ellensburg, Wash.

There are women everywhere who long for children in their homes yet are denied this happiness on account of some functional disorder which in most cases would readily yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such women should not give up hope until they have given this wonderful medicine a trial, and for special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of 40 years experience is at your service.

Where Wood Is Money.

Who ever heard of wooden money?

The only known currency of this kind is used by the Hudson Bay Company, and circulates all over the vast territory controlled by that powerful trading concern.

It is a coinage consisting of pieces of wood known as "castors," which are stamped with a die. These are accepted everywhere in that territory as cash, and are exchangeable for all sorts of supplies and commodities at the widely scattered stations of the corporation.

The area governed by the company is vast. In one straight line it extends as far as from London to Mecca: from King's Posts to the Pelly Banks is further than from Paris to Samarcand. Over all of this region the corporation exercise a complete dominion, employing the native Indians, chiefly Ojibway and Cree, to collect the furs which furnish its revenue.

Hudson Bay is about two-thirds the size of the Gulf of Mexico. It is an almost landlocked sea, with 2,000 miles of coast line. More than 300 years ago Henry Hudson sailed to find the northwest passage, wintered there. His crew mutinied and set him afloat in an open boat with his son and seven others. He and his companions were never seen again.

The unit of value in that part of the world is a beaver skin. Two martens are equal to one beaver, and twenty muskrats are equivalent to one marten. Trapping is done in winter, and in spring the Indians bring the pelts to the stations, receiving in payment for them wooden money. With the latter they buy what supplies they need at the store maintained by the company at the stations.

Advertising!

THE biggest men in the country have found that the easiest way to spell success is to A-D-V-E-R-T-I-S-E. Suppose the newspaper did not publish the news, how would the people know what is happening? If you don't publish the Store News how will the people know about your goods? You can never sell the goods people do not know you have.

Advertising is telling about your stock. The firm that advertises gets ahead, every time, of the firm that does not advertise. Shop-worn and out-of-date stock is the penalty merchants pay for not advertising.

The Drowning of Ten Young People on Aug. 29, 1919.

(Printed by Request.

Come all you good people of every degree,
Read o'er these few lines which are penned down by me;
And when you are reading these few lines which are true,
Remember this warning is also for you.

In the year of our Lord, 1819,
On the 18th of August, on Sunday I mean;
The place where it happened I'll also put down,
But the loss I can't tell, off in Adolphustown.

These people were all in good health and in prime,
All modestly clothed in apparel so fine;
To church they were going, their God to adore,
To reach the said place they had a bay to cross o'er.

The boat being small and their number eighteen,
To go over together they all ventured in;
They launched away singing a sweet exercise,
When the moment near by them was hid from their eyes.

The voice of Jehovah speaks unto us all,
Always to be ready to go at His call;
And when you are reading these mournful lines o'er,
Death may be sent for you and enter your door.

The boat being leaky the water came in,
To bail with their hats they too late did begin;
They looked at each other and began for to weep,
The boat filled with water and sank in the deep.

Their friends on the shore then for help flew with speed,
And eight of the number from the water they freed;
There were brothers and sisters and parents also,
Soon heard the sad story which filled them with woe.

One can learn all about nursing not only in the hospital but in the home, by reading a new book just out, which teaches all there is to know about nursing except the practical experience. This book, called "Nursing in the Home," is written for the ordinary reader, contains five hundred pages, many illustrations, and is nicely bound. It contains chapters on Emergencies, First Aid, Care of the Wounded, Burns, Scalds, Broken Legs, Arms, Advice for Mothers and How to Care for Infants, How to Recognize Different Diseases, Taking Temperature, etc.

The home nurse will find within its pages reliable up-to-date instruction for caring for the sick, and the professional nurse will renew her hospital training. Such a book usually sells for $1.50, and every woman should have a copy for ready reference. Your druggist has it for sale for a limited time for 50 cents, or send 50 cents to the World's Medical Press, 654 Washington St., Buffalo, N. Y. Edition limited.

A scene was preparing to draw them to land,
Their friends all weeping around them did did stand;
Such cries and lamentings was never before,
The loss was so fatal that none could restore.

There was John and Jane German
Peter Bogart also,
There was Mary and Jane Detlor in the water below.
There was Matilda Roblin and Betsy McCow,
Betsy Clark, Huldah Madden and the said Mary Cole.

To the unchangeable regions their spirits have fled,
And left their poor bodies inactive and dead;
Their friends all loudly weeping around them were found,
Their bodies preparing to enter the ground.

On the Monday following their coffins were made,
And into the same their dead bodies were laid;
And solemnly borne unto the churchyard,
Their graves in rotation for them were prepared.

A large congregation on that solemn day,
Assembled together to visit their clay;
To join the afflicted in their mournful state,
And also to comfort in sorrow so great.

A sermon was delivered on that solemn scene,
By Sir Isaac Puffer, from Job 19;
Although these vile bodies the worms may destroy,
They shall see God in Glory in fullness of joy.

The sermon being over and brought to a close,
And some words of comfort were offered to those Whose hearts were quite broken and filled with grief,
And in a few moments the bodies must leave.

Their coffins were open to all public view,
That all might behold them and bid them adieu;
And to convey them to the silent clay,
No more to behold them until the judgment day.

And now we must leave them beneath the cold ground,
Until Gabriel's trumpet shall give the last sound;
Awake thou that sleepest, arise from your tomb,
And come forth from judgment to hear your last doom.

THE BROKEN FAITH

When the Government undertook to conscript men to fight for $1.10 per day, it promised to conscript wealth as well. The men were conscripted all right but wealth was not. More than that profiteers who accumulated vast fortunes on war contracts have been allowed to invest their fortunes in $1,400,000,000 of war bonds that have been made tax free. What is the result? The young men who fought in France and Flanders for $1.10 per day and survived, will have to take on their shoulders the financial burden of the war while profiteers live in idle luxury on the income from tax free bonds in which the unholy profits made on their war contracts are invested.—J. J. Morrison.

BYE-ELECTIONS ON OCT. 28TH

The first contested Federal bye-elections held since before the war will take place on October 28th next. The Government has fixed this as the date for polling in the eight vacancies now existing in the Federal representation. Nomination day will be one week sooner.

It is possible that several other seats will be added to the existing number because of further contemplated changes in the cabinet, and because Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance, and Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal leader, may seek election in seats other than those at present vacant. Under the circumstances neither the minister of Finance, the leader of the Opposition, nor Dr. S. F. Tolmie, Minister of Agriculture, will be in the Commons this coming session.

What did You do in the Great War?

Drink, what did you do in the Great War?

History will tell us. There has been no greater friend of Germany in Europe than the Drink Trade in Great Britain. Our brewers have helped the Kaiser more than all his submarines: their drink has been the greatest German ally outside Berlin.

It kept back guns and shells when our men were dying for them.

It held back ships that were taking our vital supplies.

It kept men idle when the safety of the army depended on them.

It seriously delayed the manufacture of explosives.

It stopped the sailing of reinforcements for hard pressed troops.

It has lured from our people £700,000,000 in these years of war; it draws ten shillings a week on an average from every home.

It destroyed five million tons of food while famine came on.

It used up hundreds of feet of cable shipping, and consumed millions of tons of coal.

It turned thousands of soldiers into moral and physical wrecks; it was the chief partner in the traffic of venereal disease.

It ruined thousands of homes of soldiers, tempted their women, and starved their little children.

It made trouble in shipyards and workshops and docks.

It arrayed itself against Lord Kitchener and the Admirally.

It exploited the bad habit of the nation in the nation's bitter need; it grew rich beyond its dreams, and never lost a penny through the war.

It can all be proved. You have only to look at the Blue Book or read the papers.

NEW ABBEY BELLS.

Symbolic Chimes Will Be Heard at Westminster.

The King and Queen, accompanied by Princess Mary, visited Whitechapel recently to take part in the ceremony of the casting of the first of the new bells for Westminster Abbey.

A donor who remains anonymous, has arranged for a general restoration of the Westminster Abbey bells, and in the process of refitting the peal it has been discovered that the casting of four new bells will be necessary. For this purpose the metal of one old bell will be used but the other three are to be made from entirely new metal, and it was for the purpose of witnessing the casting of the first of these that their Majesties and the princess went to Whitechapel. They were attended by Major Reginald Sermour, and were received by representatives of the casting firm, Bishop Ryle (Dean of Westminster), Mrs. Ryle, Mr. Knapp-Fisher, (Receiver-General of the Abbey), and Mrs. Knapp-Fisher. The works were visited in their normal condition, and all ceremony was dispensed with.

The foundry honored by the royal visit was that of Messrs. Mears & Stainbank, in the Whitechapel road. These founders have had a continuous existence in Whitechapel since 1570 (and the present premises have been occupied since 1738. Their Majesties examined with much interest the remains of a bell which was cast at the works in 1594 for Staplehurst, in Kent, and which was sent back for recasting three hundred years later. Pieces of metal were shown upon which the name and trade mark of the original head of the foundry, one Robert Bott, were cast, and it was pointed out that the present day productions had exactly similar marking except for the necessary alteration of initials. In answer to an inquiry by the King it was stated that there was now no Mears and no Stainbank, although the old name was retained. In one part of the works there were displayed a couple of bells which were reputed to have been rung from a London steeple in celebration of the defeat of the Spanish Armada.

The restored peal may properly be termed Westminster Abbey's peace bells, and one of them is named "Pax." The bell of which the royal visitors were to witness the casting is to replace one which will be preserved by the Abbey authorities as a relic of peace year.

When the royal party arrived all was in readiness for the casting ceremony, and they took their stand in the centre of the foundry and surrounded by the workmen. A mould made from a mixture of loam and firecla, was placed in position and over it was lowered the outer casing into which the molten metal was to be poured. Four crucibles filled with bell metal were ready for the operation, and when the contents had been carefully skimmed to remove all impurities, the liquid metal was poured into the receiver. The Queen and Princess Mary had expressed a wish to take some actual part in casting, and for their benefit two small moulds had been prepared next to that for the great bell and taking ladles of the same metal they filled their moulds, each casting one bell. These small bells when finished will be sent to her Majesty and to her Royal Highness as mementoes of their visit.

The King's Peace Bell bears the inscription "The Lord of Hosts is with us." Another of the four new bells is to be named "Truth," and will be inscribed "There is none other that fighteth for us." The treble or smallest bell will be named "Faith," and its inscription is to be "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory." The fourth bell, to be named "Pax" will be recast from an existing Abbey bell as already stated.

Their Majesties were asked to permit a photograph of themselves to be taken with the bell as a foreground, and when they had taken their positions the Queen remarked, "But we are not to be here alone. The workmen are much more important than we are, seeing that they have made the bell." Some of the principal workmen then joined the group, but the Queen noticing that others were left out beckoned to each, and asked that all might be included.

As the King and Queen left the spot where the Peace Bell had been cast they noticed a number of small bells suspended on a sort of screen, and a workman, taking a beater, played upon these a number of musical selections.

Alcock and Brown

Made Non-Stop Crossing Of the Atlantic Ocean

HISTORY was made when the Atlantic Ocean was crossed in a non-stop flight made by Capt. Alcock and Lieut. Brown, and the machine used to make the epoch-marking journey was the Vickers-Vimy. In a few years people will not make much more fuss about crossing the Atlantic in an airship than they make about crossing it in a steamship. It is curious to note even now that there is not one-tenth or even one-hundredth part the excitement over the unparalleled feat of Alcock and Brown that was displayed when Hawker and Grieve "took off." Psychologists may explain why. One reason, we believe, is that the successful effort lacked some of the dramatic setting of the Hawker exploit. The little incident of Hawker and Grieve as they rose in the air, slipping the wheel from the under-body in order that they might travel light, thrilled millions of people as no similar trifling incident had thrilled them since the war ended.

There was also that remark of Hawker about "beating the Yanks" that wrapped the hearts of his British fellow-subjects, and did not offend good sportsmen in the United States. Over there were millions "pulling" for Hawker and Grieve to beat their own flyers, for it was realized that unless Hawker and Grieve won their chances of saving their lives were not much better than one hundred to one. Then came the wonderful rescue by the Mary, and the English-speaking world felt that its capacity for excitement over flying had been temporarily exhausted. There was the additional incident that Commander Read of the American navy had flown from Newfoundland to the Azores, thence to Portugal, and thence to England, completing the trans-Atlantic flight in a heavier-than-air machine. So when the little flourish of trumpets Alcock and Brown make the greatest flight in history they and the world in no condition to appreciate immediately the tremendous character of their victory.

There was nothing "fluky" about their achievement. What sort of luck there was with regard to the weather was against them, and as was said of Hawker and Grieve, might be appropriately said of Alcock and Brown; they were well qualified to succeed. Whatever was possible for flying men was possible for them. Alcock is said to have spent 5,000 hours in the air, probably an unequalled record unless it might be shared by Capt. Roy N. Francis, of the American Air Service. While he was instructor at Eastchurch for two years after the autumn of 1914, Alcock spent nearly 3,000 hours in the air. After that he served a year at the Dardanelles, where he won his right to use the title "ace," if a word so much misused and so tediously repeated was any pleasure to him. As already announced—and the alteration gives pleasure—Alcock is an Englishman, born at Manchester in 1892, a powerful six-footer, fair and ruddy, and of speech like an Englishman, rather shunning society events, and with an iron nerve. His great strength of hand and wrist probably saved the ship from wreck in the weather conditions that prevailed in Newfoundland when the great "hop" was made.

Lieut. Arthur Whitten Brown, the navigator, who ought to share equally with Alcock the honor of the crossing, though, like Mackenzie Grieve, he does not so bravely catch the public eye, is one of the best qualified navigators in aeronautics. He is described as the antithesis of Alcock, being a head shorter, dark, although with greying hair as a result of his experience in a German prison camp, slim and boyish. He has a crippled left foot as a souvenir of being brought to earth by a German anti-aircraft gun at Bapaume. He is an American, or rather is doomed to be an American from accident, although he was born in Glasgow in 1886. His parents were Americans, his father having been associated with George Westinghouse in the manufacture of the automatic engine, and having gone to England upon business connected therewith. The British Westinghouse Company is now owned by the Vickers.

These are the heroes. The machine they used, like the Sopwith of Hawker and Grieve, operated by an Rolls Royce engine, or rather by two of them. Hawker depended on one. Like the Handley Page the Vickers Vimy machine was built for bombing, and it ought to be noted that Alcock was the first aviator to attack Constantinople, and holds the war record for the longest bombing raid. But the Vickers Vimy is a small machine compared with the Handley Page, having a wing-spread of 67 feet, as compared with the 46 feet 6 inches of the little Sopwith, and the wing area is less than 1,400 square feet. The machine was designed to reduce air resistance; both upper and lower planes are of the same length and ten feet apart. One particular advantage of the machine is said to be its perfect balance. It will almost fly itself once its gets started. The seating arrangement were such that Alcock and Brown could take turns at the wheel if they so desired. On the whole it has proved a great advertisement for Vickers, Vimy needing no advertisement.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

Trouble In Winnipeg Recalls Past Garry In 1869.

How history repeats itself. Just about fifty years ago Winnipeg, as it then existed, was in the throes of civil strife, and the powers that be had throttled its press, quelched its pioneer newspaper, the "Nor'wester." There was then no Thief River Falls within train ride of the striken town, where reporters could file telegraph copy. Yet two enterprising Toronto papers sent representatives hundreds of miles across the winter prairie, braving the dangers of cold and leaden bullets to get the news—and they got it.

Half a century ago Torontonians were anxiously scanning the papers for news of the troubles in Winnipeg. Greybeards remember the ways of excitement which passed over the Toronto of 55,000 inhabitants, when in December, 1869, word came through that Louis Riel, chieftain of the rebels, had taken Fort Garry (now Winnipeg), imprisoned the Canadian Government representative and the Hudson Bay Co.'s officials and set up his own government in the Northwest Territories.

It was a far cry from Toronto to the Winnipeg of 1869—Fort Garry the little outpost of civilization away out in the Great Lone Land. The C.P.R. was then scarcely thought of and spoken of by sound business men as a "mad enterprise." Twelve hundred miles of wilderness stretched between Toronto and the prairie trading post. The most feasible route to the west in those days was via Minnesota. And it was this way that the late John Ross Robertson, afterwards proprietor of the Evening Telegram, Toronto, and at that time on the staff of the now long-defunct Daily Telegraph, of Toronto, set out to visit the seat of the troubles on behalf of his paper. The Globe sent the late Mr. Robert Cunningham, and the two rival newspapermen travelled together into the wild west. Mr. Robertson got only an hour's warning. His editor-in-chief called him in, notified him of the assignment and handed him a roll of one thousand dollars for expenses on the long journey. Within the hour he was down at the old Great Western Railway station, boarding the train for Detroit.

The travellers eventually reached the little frontier town of St. Cloud, Minnesota—the end of the steel—and prepared to start off on the 400-mile trail across the prairies to Fort Garry. While waiting there, John Ross Robertson got an important story of what was happening in isolated Fort Garry, from the officer commanding the American troops at St. Cloud. The Toronto Telegraph's representative sat up all night, wrapped in a buffalo robe, writing the story which his rival had not secured and ere dawn came the despatch was in charge of the United States Government mail courier, speeding over the snow in a dog train, eastward. He secured a big beat for his paper and the first comprehensive news to reach Toronto.

Securing a farmer's sleigh and team and a French half-breed guide the travellers set out for Fort Garry, following the Red River valley and camping nightly in the woods along the bank. The weather was bitter, ranging from zero to 40 below zero, and during a blizzard one of the horses almost died. But after a strenuous journey of ten days over the trail the newspapermen drove in through the famous gateway of Fort Garry. They were immediately placed under arrest and taken before the self-styled President of the Northwest, Louis Riel. Riel gruffly asked them how they had dared to venture into his country and shut them up in a section of the fort. However, he relented to the extent of allowing them out daily for exercise, when under the escort of a half-breed with a big rifle they were allowed to go about the town seeing friends.

During this time they frequently dropped into the office of the pioneer newspaper, the "Norwester," which was located in a log cabin. Like the Winnipeg papers of to-day, it had been ordered to cease publication. But the two Toronto men, sitting down amid the familiar smell of printer's ink, had long and interesting chats with the editor and the printer, picking up much news which came in handy later.

At the end of a week of this sort of thing, during which time the Torontonians had, of course, been unable to get out a single line to their papers, Riel sent for them. The rebel leader said that he had provided an armed escort to take them across the border into Minnesota and warned them that if he again caught them in the Northwest he would shoot them without more ado. So back they went for Pembina, Minnesota, in 40 below weather, after a brief but worthwhile visit to the storm centre of the Red River Rebellion, which petered out when Wolseley and the troops went west after the murder of Scott, the Dominion Government agent.

Education.

A professor of a Western University has evolved a series of test questions for the educated which he avows are the best evidences of a real education. If you can answer "yes" to each and all of questions you are truly educated, the professor says. Here are the questions:—

1. Has education given you sympathy with all the good causes and made you espouse them?
2. Has it made you public-spirited?
3. Has it made you a brother to the weak?
4. Have you learned how to make friends and keep them?
5. Do you know what it is to be a friend yourself?
6. Can you look an honest man or a pure woman in the eye?
7. Do you see anything to love in a little child?
8. Will a lonely dog follow you in the street?
9. Can you be high-minded and happy in the meanest drudgeries of life?
10. Do you think that washing dishes or hoeing corn is just as compatible with high-thinking as playing the piano or playing golf?
11. Are you good for anything yourself?
12. Can you be happy alone?
13. Can you look out on the world and see anything but dollars and cents?
14. Can you look into a mud puddle by the wayside and see a clear sky?
15. Can you see anything in the puddle but mud?

FARMER MOORE HAS GAINED 37 POUNDS

All troubles Overcome By Taking Tanlac—Had Suffered Eight Years.

"I suffered for eight long years before I found a medicine that would do me any good, but since taking Tanlac I have gained exactly thirty-seven pounds, and all my troubles have been completely overcome," said John N. Moore, well-known and prosperous farmer, who lives on R. F. D. No. 4, Empire, Ill., while in Shortlosse's drug store in Bloomington the other day.

"When I commenced taking Tanlac," he continued, "I had reached the point where I could not do any work at all, and was forced to hire a hand to take my place on the farm. I had suffered so much and so long with stomach trouble, I was just about down and out so far as health and strength was concerned. During all these years my appetite was very poor, and what little I did manage to eat would cause me worlds of suffering. Gas would form on my stomach so bad that I could hardly get my breath, and I would have the worst sort of cramping spells. I finally got to where I was hardly ever able to retain what I ate, and would actually get nauseated every time I looked at anything to eat. I had fallen off so much and was so low in health, that all my friends were talking about the awful condition I was in. I was very nervous all the time and never knew what a good night's sleep was.

"I heard about Tanlac, then, and I thought I would give it a trial. Well, sir, my friends and neighbors are talking differently now. They are asking me what in the world have I been taking to make such an improvement in my condition, and it just does my heart good to tell them that Tanlac did it. It is wonderful the way I have gained in weight and strength. I can go to the field now and do as much hard work as any hand on the farm. My stomach seems to be in perfect condition, and I never have indigestion, and am not bothered with gas, forming after meals. I have the best appetite I ever had in my life, nad can eat just anything I want. I am free from all that nervousness, too, and I sleep just like a boy every night. Tanlac has done all that for me, and I am as well and hearty now as I ever was in my life, and as long as I live I will pass the good word along to others who suffer as I did."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

Long Live The King

"Good heavens," cried the archduchess, and stared into the carriage. "Otto!"

"He is mine," said the crown prince fondly. "He is the cleverest dog. He can do all sorts of things."

"Put him out."

"But he is mine," protested Ferdinand William Otto. "He is a gift. That gentleman there, in the corduroy jacket—"

"Put him out," said the Archduchess Annunciata.

There was nothing else to do. The crown prince did not cry. He was much too proud. He thanked the donor again carefully, and regretted that he could not accept the dog. He said it was a wonderful dog, and just the sort he liked. And the carriage drove away.

He went back to the palace, and finding that the governess still had a headache, settled down to the burnt wood frame. Once he glanced up lit the woolen dog on the top of the cabinet. "Well, anyhow," he said sturdily, "I still have you."

CHAPTER XI.

As a Man May Love a Woman.

Hedwig came to tea that afternoon. She came in softly, and defiantly, for she was doing a forbidden thing, but Prince Ferdinand William Otto had put away the frame against such a contingency. He had, as a matter of fact, been putting cold cloths on Miss Braithwaite's forehead.

"I always do it," he informed Hedwig. "I like doing it. It gives me something to do. She likes them rather dry, so the water doesn't run down her neck."

Had Miss Braithwaite not been ill, Hedwig would have talked things over with her then. There was no one else to whom she could go. Hilda refused to consider the prospect of marriage as anything but pleasurable, and between her mother and Hedwig there had never been any close relationship.

But Miss Braithwaite lay motionless, her face set in lines of suffering, and after a time Hedwig rose and tiptoed out of the room.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto was excited. Tea had already come, and on the rare occasions when the governess was ill, it was his privilege to pour the tea.

"Nikky is coming," he said rapidly, "and the three of us will have a party. Please don't tell me how you like your tea, and see if I can remember."

"Very well, dear," Hedwig said gently, and went to the window.

Nikky entered almost immediately.

As a matter of fact, although he showed no trace of it, Nikky had been having an extremely bad time since his return; the chancellor, who may or may not have known that his heart was breaking, had given him a very severe scolding on the way back from Wedeling. It did Nikky good, too, for it roused him to his own defense, and made him forget, for a few minutes anyhow, that life was over for him, and that the chancellor carried his death sentence in his old leather dispatch case.

After that, arriving in the capital, they had driven to the little office in a back street, and there Nikky had roused himself again enough to give a description of Peter Niburg, and to give the location of the house where he lived. But he slumped again after that, ate no dinner, and spent a longish time in the place, staring up at Annunciata's windows, where he had once seen Hedwig on the balcony.

Then, late in the evening, Nikky was summoned to the king's bedroom, and came out pale, with his shoulders very square. He had received a real wigging this time, and even contemplated throwing himself in the river. Only he could swim so damnably well!

But he had the natural elasticity of youth, and a sort of persistent belief in his own luck, rather like the chancellor's confidence in seven as a number—a confidence, by the way, which the countess could easily have shaken. So he had wakened the next morning rather cheerful than otherwise, and over a breakfast of broiled ham had refused to look ahead farther than the day.

That afternoon, in the study, Nikky hesitated when he saw Hedwig. Then he came and bent low over her hand. And Hedwig, because every instinct yearned to touch his shining bent head, spoke to him very calmly, was rather distant, a little cold.

"You have been away, I think?" she said.

"For a day or two, highness."

"And today," he added, reproachfully, "today you did not ride."

"I did not feel like riding," Hedwig responded listlessly. "I am tired. I think I am always tired."

"Lemon and two lumps," muttered the crown prince. "That's Nikky's, Hedwig. Give it to him, please."

Nikky went a trifle pale as their fingers touched. But he tasted his tea, and pronounced it excellent.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto chattered excitedly. He told of the dog, dilating on its cleverness, but passing politely over the manner of its return. Now and then Hedwig glanced at Nikky, when he was not looking, and always, when they dared, the young soldier's eyes were on her.

"She will take some tea without sugar," announced the crown prince.

While he poured it, Hedwig was thinking. Was it possible that Nikky, of every one, should have been chosen to carry to Karl the marriage arrangements? What an irony! What a jest! It was true there was a change in him. He looked subdued, almost sad.

"To Karnia?" she asked, when Prince Ferdinand William Otto had left the room. "Officially?"

"Yes—exactly."

"Where, in Karnia?"

"I ended," Nikky confessed, "at Wedeling."

Hedwig gazed at him, her elbows propped on the tea table. "Then," she said, "I think you know."

"I know, highness."

"And you have nothing to say?"

"Highness," Nikky began huskily, "you know what I would say. And that I cannot. To take advantage of Otto's fancy for me, a child's liking, to violate the confidence of those who placed me here—I am doing that, every moment."

"What about me?" Hedwig asked. "Do I count for nothing? Does it not matter at all how I feel, whether I am happy or wretched? Isn't that as important as honor?"

Nikky flung out his hands. "You know," he said rapidly. "What can I tell you that you do not know a thousand times? I love you. Not as a subject may adore his princess, but as a man loves a woman."

She drew herself up. "Love!" she said. "I do not call that love."

"It is greater love than you know," said poor Nikky. But all his courage died a moment later, and his resolution with it, for without warning Hedwig dropped her head on her hands and, crouching forlornly, fell to sobbing.

"I counted on you," she said wildly. "And you are like the others. No one cares how wretched I am. I wish I might die."

Then indeed Nikky was lost. In an instant he was on his knees beside her, his arms close about her, his head bowed against her breast. And Hedwig relaxed to his embrace. When at last he turned and looked up at her, it was Hedwig who bent and kissed him.

"At least," she whispered, "we have had this. We can always remember, whatever comes, that we have had this."

But Nikky was of very human stuff, and not the sort that may live by memories. He was very haggard when he rose to his feet—haggard, and his mouth was doggedly set. "I will never give you up, now," he said.

Brave words, of course. But as he said them he realized their futility. The eyes he turned on her were, as he claimed her, without hope. For there was no escape.

Hedwig, with shining eyes, was already planning.

"We will go away, Nikky," she said.

"We Will Go Away, Nikky," She Said.

"And it must be soon, because otherwise—"

Nikky dared not touch her again, knowing what he had to say. "Dearest," he said, bending toward her, "that is what we cannot do."

"No?" She looked up, puzzled, but still confident. "And why, cowardly one?"

"Because I have given my word to remain with the crown prince." Then, seeing that she still did not comprehend, he explained, swiftly. He stood, as many a man has stood before, between love and loyalty to his king, and he was a soldier. He had no choice.

It was terrible to him to see the light die out of her eyes. But even as he told her of the dangers that compassed the child and possibly others of the family, he saw that they touched her remotely, if at all.

All she said, when Nikky finished, was: "I might have known it. Of course they would get me, as they did the others." But a moment later she rose and threw out her arms. "How skilful they are! They knew about it. It is all a part of the plot. They made you promise never to desert Otto, so that their arrangements need not be interfered with. Oh, I know them, better than you do. They are all cruel. It is the blood."

That evening the Princess Hedwig went unannounced to her grandfather's apartment, and demanded to be allowed to enter.

A gentleman in waiting bowed deeply, but stood before the door. "Your highness must pardon my reminding your highness," he said firmly, "that no one may enter his majesty's presence without permission."

"Then go in," said Hedwig, in a white rage, "and get the permission."

The gentleman in waiting went in, very deliberately, because his dignity was outraged. The moment he had gone, however, Hedwig flung the door open, and followed, standing, a figure of tragic defiance, inside the heavy curtains of the king's bedroom.

"There is no use saying you won't see me, grandfather. For here I am."

They eyed each other, the one, it must be told, a trifle uneasily, the other desperately. Then into the king's eyes came a flash of admiration, and just a gleam of amusement.

"So I perceive," he said. "Come here, Hedwig."

A sister of charity was standing by the king's bed. She had cared for him through many illnesses. In the intervals she retired to her cloister and read holy books and sewed for the poor.

The sister went out, her black habit dragging, but she did not sew. Some time later she heard bitter crying in the royal bed chamber, and the king's tones, soothing now and very sad.

"There is a higher duty than happiness," he said. "There are greater things than love. And one day you will know this."

When she went in Hedwig had gone, and the old king, lying in his bed, was looking at the portrait of his dead son.

• • • • • • • • • •

The following morning the Countess Loschek left for a holiday. She had the choice of but two alternatives, to do as she had been commanded, for it amounted to that, or to die. The committee would not kill her, in case she killed them. It would be unnecessary. Enough that they place the letter and the code in the hands of the authorities, by some anonymous means. Wellenough she knew the chancellor's inflexible anger, and the Archduchess Annunciata's cold rage. They would sweep her away with a gesture, and the world die the death of forgetfulness.

A week! Time had been when a week of the dragging days at the palace had seemed eternity. Now the hours flew. The gold clock on her dressing table, a gift from the archduchess, marked them with flying hands.

During the afternoon came a package, rather unskillfully tied with a gilt cord. Opening it, the countess disclosed a glove box of wood, with a design of rather shaky violets burnt into the cover. Inside was a note:

I am very sorry you are sick. This is to put your gloves in when you travel. Please excuse the work. I have had it in a hurry.

FERDINAND WILLIAM OTTO.

Suddenly the countess laughed, choking hysterical laughter that alarmed Mina; horrible laughter, which left her paler than ever and gasping.

• • • • • • • • • •

The old castle of the Loscheks looked grim and hospitable when it reached it that night. Built during the years when the unbelievers overran southern Europe, it stood in a commanding position over a valley, and a steep, walled road led to it.

But, its ancient glory and good repute departed, its garrison gone, its drawbridge and moat things of the past, its heavy hangings and furnishings moldering from long neglect, it hung over the valley, a past menace, an empty threat.

To this dreary refuge the countess had fled. She wanted the silence of its still rooms in which to think. Wretched herself, its wretchedness called her. As the carriage which had brought her from the railway turned into its woods, and she breathed the pungent odor of pine and balsam, she relaxed for the first time.

Why was she so hopeless? She could escape. She knew the woods well. None who followed her could know them so well. She would get away, and somewhere, in a new world, make a fresh start. Surely, after all, peace was the greatest thing in the world.

The carriage drove on; Mina, on the box, crossed herself at sight of the church, and chatted with the driver, a great figure who crowded her to the very edge of the seat.

"I am glad to be here," she said. "I am sick of grandeur. My home is in Etzel." She turned and inspected the man beside here. "You are a newcomer, I think?"

"I have just come to Etzel."

"Then you cannot tell me about my people." She was disappointed.

"And you," inquired the driver, "you will stay for a visit?"

"A week only. But better than nothing."

"After that, you return to the city?"

"Yes. Madame the countess—you would know, if you were Etzel-born—madame the countess is lefy in waiting to her royal highness, the Archduchess Annunciata."

"So!" said the driver. But he was not curious, and the broken road demanded his attention. He was but newly come, so very newly that he did not know his way, and once made a wrong turning.

The countess relaxed. She slept that night.

When she had breakfasted and dressed, she went out on a balcony, and looked down at the valley. Her eyes dropped to the road below, where in the sunshine the caretaker was beating a rug. Close to him, in intimate and cautious conversation, was the driver of the night before. Glancing up, they saw her and at once separated.

Gone was peace, then. The countess knew—knew certainly. "Our eyes see everywhere." Eyes, indeed—eyes that even now the caretaker raised furtively from his rug.

Nevertheless, the countess was minded to experiment, to be certain. For none is so suspicious, she knew, as one who fears suspicion. None so guilty as the guilty. During the forenoon she walked through the woods, going briskly, with vigorous, mountain-bred feet. No crackle of underbrush disturbed her. Swift turnings revealed no lurking figures skulking behind the trunks of trees. But where an ancient stone bridge crossed a mountain stream, she came on the huge driver of the night before reflectively fishing.

BEDRIDDEN WITH RHEUMATISM

Felt That He Would Never Walk Again "FRUIT-A-TIVES" Brought Relief.

MR. LORENZO LEDUC

5 Ottawa St., Hull, P.Q.

"Fruit-a-tives" is certainly a wonder. For a year, I suffered with Rheumatism; being forced to stay in bed for five months. I tried all kinds of medicine but without getting better; and thought I would never be able to walk again.

"One day while lying in bed, I read about 'Fruit-a-tives' the great fruit medicine; and it seemed just what I needed, so I decided to try it.

The first box helped me, and I took the tablets regularly until every trace of the Rheumatism left me.

I have every confidence in 'Fruit-a-tives' and strongly recommend them to every sufferer from Rheumatism".

He saluted her gravely, and the countess paused and looked at him. "You have caught no fish, my friend?" she said.

"No, madame. But one plays about my hook."

She turned back. Eyes everywhere, and arms, great hairy arms. And feet that, for all their size, must step lightly!

On the second day she made a desperate resolve, and characteristically put it into execution at once. She sent for the caretaker. When he came, uneasy, for the Loscheks were justly feared in the countryside, and even the thing of which he knew gave him small courage, she lost no time in evasion.

"Go," she said, "and bring here your accomplice."

"My accomplice, madame! I do not—"

"You heard me," she said.

He turned, half sullen, half terrified, and paused. "Which do you refer to, madame?"

She had seen only the one. Then there were others. Who could tell how many others?

"The one who drove here."

So he went, leaving her to desperate reflection. When he returned, it was to usher in the heavy figure of the spy.

"Which of you is in authority?" she demanded.

"I, madame." It was the spy who spoke.

She dismissed the caretaker with a gesture.

"Have you any discretion over me? Or must you refer matters to those who sent you?"

"I must refer to them."

"How long will it take to send a message and receive a reply?"

He considered. "Until tomorrow night, madame."

Another day gone, then, and nothing determined!

"Now, listen," she said, "and listen carefully. I have come here to decide

"Which of You is in Authority?" She Demanded.

a certain question. Whether you know what that question is or not, does not matter. But before I decide it I must take a certain journey. I wish to make that journey. It is into Karnia."

She watched him. "It is impossible. My instructions—"

"I am not asking your permission. I wish to send a letter to the commandante. They, and they alone, will determine this thing. Will you send the letter?"

When he hesitated, perplexed, she got up and moved to her writing table. "I shall write the letter," she said haughtily. "And that it is sent. When I report at the end of the time that I have sent such a letter, you can judge better than I the result if it has not been received."

He was still dubious, but she wrote the letter and gave it to him, her face proud and scornful. But she was not easy, for all that, and she watched from her balcony to see if any messenger left the castle and descended the mountain road. She was rewarded, an hour later, by seeing a figure leave the old tryway and start afoot toward the village, a pale faced man with colorless hair. A part of the hidden guard that surrounded her, she knew, and somebody familiar. But, although she racked her brains, she could not remember where she had seen him.

That day, toward evening, the huge man presented himself. He brought no letter, but an oral message. "Permission is given, madame," he said. "I myself shall accompany you."

CHAPTER XII.

Nikky Makes a Promise.

The chancellor lived alone, in his little house near the palace, a house that looked strangely like him, overhanging eyebrows and all, with windows that were like his eyes, clear and concealing many secrets. A grim, gray little old house, which concealed behind it a walled garden full of unexpected charm. And that, too, was like the chancellor.

Mathilde kept his house for him, mended and pressed his uniforms, washed and starched his linen, quarreled with the orderly who attended him, and drove him to bed at night.

Mathilde was in touch with the people. It was Mathilde, and not one of his agents, who had brought word of the approaching revolt of the coppersmiths' guild, and enabled him to check it almost before it began. A stolc, this Mathilde, with her tall, spare figure and glowing eyes, stolc and patriot. Once every month she burned four candles before the shrine of Our Lady of Sorrows in the cathedral, because of four sons she had given to her country.

On the evening of the day Hedwig had made her futile appeal to the king, the chancellor sat alone. His dinner, almost untasted, lay on his plate. It was nine o'clock. At something after seven he had paid his evening visit to the king, and had found him uneasy and restless.

"Sit down," the king had said. "I need steadying, old friend."

"Steadying, sire?"

"I have had a visit from Hedwig. Rather a trying one, poor child." He turned and fixed on his chancellor his faded eyes. "You still think it is the best thing?"

"It is the only thing."

"But all this haste," put in the king querulously. "Is that so necessary? Hedwig begs for time. She hardly knows the man."

"Time! But I thought—" He hesitated. How say to a dying man that time was the one thing he did not have?

Another thing. She was incoherent, but I gathered that there was some one else. The whole interview was ecclonic. It seems, however, that this young protege of yours, Larisch, has been making love to her over Otto's head."

Mettlich's face hardened, a gradual process, as the news penetrated in all its significance.

"A boy and girl affair, sire. He is loyal. And in all of this, you and I are reckoning without Karl. The princess hardly knows him, and naturally she is horrified. But his approaching visit will make many changes. He is a fine figure of a man, and women—"

"Exactly," said the king dryly. "What the chancellor cannot say is that women always had loved Karl, and the king understood.

"His wild days are over," bluntly observed the chancellor. "He is forty, sire."

"Aye," said the king. "And at forty a bad man changes his nature, and purifies himself in marriage! Nonsense, Karl will be as he has always been. But we have gone into this before. Only, I am sorry for Hedwig. Get rid of this young Larisch."

The chancellor sat reflecting, his chin dropped forward on his breast. "Otto will miss him."

"Well, out with it. I may not dismiss him. What, then?"

"It is always easy to send men away. But it is sometimes better to retain them, and force them to your will. We have here an arrangement that is satisfactory. Larisch is keen, young, and loyal. Hedwig has thrown herself at him. For that, sire, she is responsible, not He."

"Then get rid of her," growled the king.

The chancellor rose. "If the situation is left to me, sire," he said, "I will promise two things. That Otto will keep his friend, and that the Princess Hedwig will bow to your wishes without further argument."

"Do it, and God help you," said the king, again with the flicker of amusement.

The chancellor had gone home, walking heavily along the darkening streets. Once again he had conquered. The reins remained in his gnarled old hands. And he was about to put the honor of the country into the keeping of the son of Maria Menrad, whom he had once loved.

So now he sat in his study, and waited. When he heard Nikky's quick step as he came along the tile passage, he picked up his pipe.

Nikky entered, and made his way across the room in the twilight, with the ease of familiarity. "I am late, sir," he apologized. "We found our man, and he is safely jailed. He made no resistance."

"Sit down," said the chancellor. And, touching a bell, he asked Mathilde for coffee. "So we have him," he reflected. "The next thing is to discover if he knows who his assailants were. That, and the person for whom he acted—however, I sent for you for another reason. What is this about the Princess Hedwig?"

"The Princess Hedwig?"

"What silly boy! A young girl who cannot know her own mind! And for such a bit of romantic nothing you would risk your position. It is vain. You know that."

Nikky remained silent, a little sullen.

"The princess went to the king with her story this evening." The boy started. "A cruel proceeding, but the young are always cruel. The expected result has followed: The king wishes you sent away."

"I am at his command, sir."

The chancellor filled his pipe from a bowl near by, working deliberately. Nikky sat still, rather rigid.

"May I ask," he said at last, "that you say to the king that the responsibility is mine? No possible blame can attach to the Princess Hedwig. I love her, and—I am not clever. I show what I feel."

"The immediate result," said the chancellor cruelly, "will doubtless be a putting forward of the date of her marriage." Nikky's hands clenched. "A further result would be your dismissal from the army. One does not do such things as you have done, lightly."

"Lightly!" said Nikky Larisch. "Heaven!"

"But," continued the chancellor, "I have a better way. I have faith, for one thing, in your blood. The son of Maria Menrad must be—his mother's son. And the crown prince is attached to you. Not for your sake, but for his, I am inclined to be lenient. What I shall demand for that leniency is that no word of love again pass between you and the Princess Hedwig."

"It would be easier to go away."

Nikky closed his eyes. It was getting to be a habit, just as some people crack their knuckles.

"We need our friends about us," the chancellor continued. "The carnival is coming, always a dangerous time for him. The king grows weaker day by day. A crisis is impending for all of us, and we need you."

Nikky rose, steady enough now, but white to the lips.

"I give my word, sir," he said. "I shall say no word of—of how I feel to Hedwig. Not again. She knows—and I think," he added proudly, "that she knows I shall not change. That I shall always—"

"Exactly!" said the chancellor. It was the very pitch of the king's dry old voice. "Of course she knows, being a woman. And now, good night."

But long after Nikky had gone he sat in the darkness. He felt old and tired and a hypocrite. The boy would not forget, as he himself had not forgotten.

Peter Niburg was shot at dawn the next morning. He went, a coward, to his death, held between two guards and crying piteously. But he died a brave man. Not once in the long hours of his interrogation had he betrayed the name of the Countess Loschek.

The Crown Prince Ferdinand William Otto of Livonia was having a birthday. Now, a birthday for a crown prince of Livonia is not a matter of a cake with candles on it, and having his ears pulled, once for each year and an extra one to grow on. Nor of a holiday from lessons, and a picnic in spring woods. Nor a party, with children frolicking and scratching the best furniture.

In the first place, he was wakened at dawn and taken to early service in the chapel, a solemn function, with the court assembled and slightly sleepy. The crown prince, who was trying to look his additional dignity of years, sat and stood as erect as possible, and received the delegation of citizens in the great audience chamber of the palace, a solitary little figure, standing on the red carpet before the dais at the end. The chancellor stood near the boy, resplendent in his dress uniform, a blue ribbon across his shirt front, over which Mathilde had taken hours. He was the Mettlich of the gubbie eye now, hard of features, impassive, inflexible.

HOW YOU CAN TELL GENUINE ASPIRIN

Only Tablets with "Bayer Cross" are Aspirin—No others!

BAYER

If you don't see the "Bayer Cross" on the tablets, refuse them—they are not Aspirin at all.

There is only one Aspirin, that marked with the "Bayer Cross"—all other tablets are only acid imitations.

Look for the "Bayer Cross"! Then it is real Aspirin, for which there is no substitute.

Aspirin is not German but is made in Canada by Canadians, and is owned by a Canadian Company, all rights being purchased from the U. S. Government.

Genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" have been proved safe by millions for Pain, Headache, Neuralgia, Colds, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuritis.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—also larger "Bayer" packages, can be had at any drug store.

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada), of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.

TO BLEND COLORS

Trick Is in Knowing What Hues Will Combine.

Some of the Popular and Harmonizing Tints That Are in the Limelight This Season.

The trick is in knowing what colors combine. It is not enough to know that such and such a color carries fashion's immediate favor, but to know just what color that color goes with to conform with the canons of smartness. And really in designing your new frocks, if you have settled the matter of color combination, you have accomplished quite a little. For color combinations that would be impossible one season have, because they are stamped with the approval of some great dressmaker, or through some association of the times, taken first place among combinations that are distinctly possible.

At the present time Paris has stamped with her approval combinations of metallic hue and almost any color on the calendar. Thus many of the smartest new ribbons show silver or gold threads running one way, with the colored threads running the other. These are used extensively in connection with the new evening frocks. Among the interesting ones are gold and brown, gold with a bright blue and silver with emerald green. Such a ribbon would, of course, give the key to the color scheme of the evening frock on which it was used.

Pale blue georgette over yellow is a color combination seen in many of the newer lingerie. The effect is a rather vague green. For the young woman with a complexion fair and clear such a color combination would have great charm in an evening frock.

Henna may be on the wane, but it has attached some interest to itself even in a house gown in which it is combined with mustard yellow. Now, this doesn't sound very pretty, or perhaps it isn't pretty, but interesting it is, and it carries with it a distinct impression of smartness.

Another color combination that isn't pretty, but that has the "right" look to it, is violet and brick. Some shades of brown are used with a vivid red in some of the evening hats in Paris, and, though brown and red would to most persons seem to be a very unlovely combination, this carries the seal of fashion's approval. Cream and cerise are interestingly combined in one of the new foulards, and this might suggest a color scheme for an afternoon frock of considerable distinction.

Particularly pleasing at all times are combinations of two harmonizing shades of the same color. They are never difficult as are some of the more daring contrasting combinations. Paquin used two shades of rose in marquisette recently with extremely effective results, and another French dressmaker used orchid georgette embroidered in rose wool.

GINGHAM AND MUSLIN LINING

Materials for Inner Finish of Coats and Capes Afford New and Approved Idea.

We hear of satin capes shown at the Paris openings that were lined with a soft pile fabric like duvetyn. These must add materially to the warmth of the garment, notes a fashion writer.

And have you heard of gingham linings? This is a new idea, but after all, why would not gingham make as good a lining for a summer cape or coat as satin or peau de cygne or chiffon?

Who would ever have dared to use unbleached muslin for the lining of coats and capes? No one in the world but one of the smartest of Paris dressmakers. Apparently this is merely a bit of daring, and not done in an effort toward economy, for the unbleached fabric is used to line the most gorgeous and luxurious of garments.

Organdie and English Prints.

Some of the newest French blouses are of organdie trimmed in English prints, a cotton fabric printed in calico designs.

BEDROOM LINENS AND SCARFS

Blocked Effect Is Done Either Colors or White, According to Accompanying Embroidery.

A curious development in table linens and scarfs for the bedroom is the blocked effect done either in colors or white, according to the character of the accompanying embroidery and in various ways. The reason for this is rather obvious. Now that fine linens have become so scarce, the pleasure of looking at a pure, unbroken surface of soft white linen is not for the housewife of today. Her "linens" will very likely be cottons for some time, and anything which will break the cotton expanse and make the linen less noticeable is welcome.

Hemstitching by machine or hand is one way of making these checkered cloths. Outline or couching is effective, too. The blocks vary according to the size of the piece, but six inches is a good working size for most of them. Small motifs may then appear in the corners or in every other block, or as a border around the edge. There is much chance for novelty here.

DICTATES OF FASHION

The richer the fabric the less it should be trimmed.

Draped collars appear on the spring wrap coats.

Gray astrakhan is much liked on suits instead of other furs.

Leopard skin makes a most striking trimming for beige velvet.

Match Scratcher.

Save the strip of sandpaper that comes on the match boxes and tack on jamb of door with tiny shoe tacks; or attach to woodwork and cut five inches long and three-eighths inch wide. Place a tack at each end and one in the middle. This will not interfere with opening and closing of door, and will save steps in running back to get another match.

Skirts Have Deep Hems.

Many of the new organdie and other sheer lawn frocks are made with hems so deep as to meet midway from the ankles to the waistline. This makes the frock set rather better than otherwise, because of the added weight at the lower half of the skirt, and also renders a skirt made of transparent material less transparent.

The Lucky Horseshoe.

The superstitious use of horseshoes as emblems of good luck originated in England in the seventeenth century. They were at first deemed a protection against witches and evil spirits, and were nailed on doors of houses with the curve uppermost. The custom of nailing horseshoes to ships and other sailing craft is still in vogue.

Simply Couldn't Be Done.

Mother knew several practical gifts were to be given Daniel, so she was preparing him in advance by telling him he was to be appreciative of practical gifts as well as toys. "But, mother," said the little fellow, "my appreciator isn't so big that I can be glad for shoes and such things."

SUIT OR A DRESS?

Question Is a Puzzling One for Majority of Women.

Tight-Fitting, Severely Tailored Outfit Not So Much Shown as More Youthful Looking Models.

Whether to buy a tailored suit, or a dress and separate coat, that is the problem which confronts the woman who goes forth at this time to spend her dress allowance, and this spring the question is a puzzling one. Some years are what the garment makers call "suit years," when the problem is settled, before we even begin to shop, by the manufacturers; other years the shops show nothing, comparatively speaking, but one-piece dresses and coats. But this year both suits and dresses are shown in amazing variety, and wise indeed is the woman who has looked over her wardrobe and reached a decision as to what she needs, before she goes to the stores.

The new suits are distinctive in several ways. Coats are just finger-tip length, as a rule, and many of them have the loose outside pocket effect, achieved by turning up the bottom of the coat at the sides and in front. The skirts are narrow, as rumor predicted that they would be. The more extreme models have made allowance for the wearer's need, either by slitting the skirt at the back seam for a few inches up the hem, or, as in one case, by making the skirt with the front and back widths absolutely separate as far up as the hips; these two sections were then caught together at intervals down the sides by short threads, heavily buttonholed, which held the two sections together except when the wearer was walking. When such skirts as these are worn, there is worn also a heavy satin slip, matching the skirt in color.

The tight-fitting, severely tailored suit is not so much shown as are the looser-coated, more youthful-looking models. Narrow belts are on nearly all of these jackets, fastening at the side; the skirts of the coats are rather full, and are quite apt to be inconspicuously trimmed. Embroidered silk or heavy braids make one such coat interesting; another is bound with narrow, flat, black silk braid; still another harks back to the woven ribbon work in which our grandmothers delighted, the skirt of the coat being made of black ribbon, woven in a squared pattern with the blue ribbons of which the suit was made. Tucks, running crosswise, relieve these short jackets of plainness, and sometimes, on suits meant for formal wear, an embroidered band around the bottom edge of the coat gives it distinction. One delightfully simple suit of dark blue serge had rather wide, rolled seams, which made a decidedly interesting finish. The wide, scarf collar, one end of which is thrown over the wearer's shoulder, is nearly always becoming, but is, of course, impractical on a suit which must be worn on all occasions and in all weathers, since its effect is more becoming than trim.

Suit of Gray English Tissue.

FADS AND FANCIES

The new tunic skirt has the tunic coming only to the knee.

Gray and black form the smartest combination of the moment.

A good deal of Chinese filet is used on flesh crepe blouses.

Dressy taffeta suits are seen, some with cape coat effects.

The suit coat has made excellent use of the deep shawl collar.

Copper, tete de negre and black are the favorite colors for veils.

The afternoon frocks have belts made of material rather than of ribbon.

The oxford shoe, topped by a ribbed stocking, has no rival for street wear.

GREAT BOON TO WEST.

Many Returned Soldiers Are Going on the Land.

Reports from the various Soldier Settlement administration centres in the West indicate that possibly five thousand applications made by returned men have been approved. At 160 acres each this means the taking up of 800,000 acres of land. But the development is only beginning to get under way. If the scheme is not too badly "knocked" by mistaken critics it is reasonable to suppose that between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 acres will, in this way, be taken up. That is what is hoped to have this addition to permanent settlement in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Twenty-five thousand newcomers getting an average holding of $4,000 would mean $100,000,000 put out in three provinces.

Speaking at Regina recently Major Ashton, of the Soldier Settlement Board, pointed out the possibilities of the scheme in Saskatchewan. Probably about 30,000 soldiers, he said, would return to that province, and the records show that 75 per cent. of them were either farmers or farm laborers. If three-fifths of them, or 18,000 took advantage of the Soldier Settlement scheme and had an average loan of $4,000 it would mean the advancing of $72,000,000 for the development work in Saskatchewan alone. To date one-third more applications have been approved from Alberta than from Saskatchewan, so it is easy to see what the West has to gain through the successful working out of the Soldier Settlement scheme.

If the loan companies were to put out $50,000,000 this year on farm loans in the prairie provinces many a wonderful thing it would be considered. With any appreciable measure of success, the Soldier Settlement Board will do better than that. Compared with anything that the western provinces have done in the way of assisting agriculture through loans, even now the Soldier Settlement scheme is a great success. During the two years that the Saskatchewan Farm Loans Board has been in operation it has not loaned much more than $2,000,000, and Manitoba has probably not loaned more than $2,000,000. Still, both of these provinces are claiming a great deal of credit for what they have done very rightly so. Their work in this respect goes to show that the possibilities before the Soldier Settlement Board as a means of promoting permanent settlement are wonderful.

Using the Libraries.

During 1918 more than 120,000 books classified as "Useful Arts" were lent by the public libraries of the Province of Ontario to the schools. An inestimable amount of good was done by the libraries in assisting men and women in vocational study.

The libraries are entitled to be rated as an essential part of the technical educational system of the province. The libraries reach a larger number of people with technical books than will ever be reached by technical schools. They can also provide books on subjects that are not commonly taught in technical schools and are a supplement to the work of instruction given in technical schools. The libraries can also serve men and women who can not attend a technical school.

During the same year the Canadian National Library for the Blind circulated 5,101 books in the province. The total membership for the year was 572.

Libraries were established in all the military camps in the province for the use of the soldiers-in-training. Each camp was visited by a representative of the Public Libraries Board, for the purpose of studying conditions and of organizing the reception of the books and for their circulation. The purchase of the books, their preparation for use, shipping, were all done within a few weeks. About 8,000 volumes were purchased and 2,500 were received as gifts. The libraries thus out ranged from 250 to 2,500 volumes each.

Libraries were sent to the following camps: Petawawa, Niagara Camp, Deseronto, Leaside (R.A.F.), Fort Henry Camp, Camp Borden (R.A.F.), Camp Mohawk (R.A.F.), London Camp, Beamsville (School of Aerial Fighting), Armour Heights (R.A.F.), and Brockville Camp.

The following hospitals also secured libraries: Whitby Convalescent Hospital, St. Andrew's Convalescent Hospital, Parkville Orthopaedic, Guelph Military Hospital, Mowat Sanitarium, Kingston, Wellington Street Barracks, Ottawa, Imperial Munitions Board, Beamsville; Soldiers' and Sailors' Settlement, Kapuskasing; Soldiers' and Sailors' Training School, Monteith; Freeport Hospital, and Fort Henry Hospital.

The circulation of travelling libraries greatly increased.

Market for Horses.

Mr. H. S. Arkell, Dominion Live Stock Commissioner, is in Europe for the purpose of arranging, among other things, for an overseas market for Canadian horses. The demand from Belgium, France and the United States for horses of varying weights is stated by Mr. Arkell to be heavy, and the prices likely to be offered are of such a figure as to make shipment, even from the Western Provinces, good business. Alberta alone expects to ship a large number of horses to Europe.

Value of Drainage Recognized.

From one yard in Kent county, Ont., 700,000 tile were sold this spring, and District Representative Clemens declares that Wellington county farmers are showing more interest in drainage than in any previous period. Evidently the most impressive lesson imparted by this unusually wet season has gone home.

"GRANDMOTHER" LUNDY DEAD.

Knitted Four Hundred Pairs of Socks During the War.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sarah Lundy, known throughout the Dominion as the grandmother of the Canadian army because she knitted 400 pairs of socks for the Canadian Red Cross during the war, died on June 20 at her home in Lundy's Lane. She was 92 years old. She was in good health until a few days ago, when she fell in her home and died from the effects of the fall.

Mrs. Lundy lived nearly all her life in Stamford township. Her mother's family, the Stedmans, settled near Niagara Falls, N.Y., before the Revolutionary War. Their flock of wild goats gave the name to Goat Island. In 1845 Mrs. Lundy, whose maiden name was Sparkman, married Lanty Lundy, grandson of William Lundy and great-grandson of Thomas Lundy, who fought with the Canadian militia in 1812 and 1814.

The historic roadway, Lundy's Lane, was named for the family. Four generations of Lundys have been born on it, and some of the great-grandchildren of the original settler still survive. The property, when an Indian forest trail, was given to the Lundys over the great seal of King George III.

The foundation of the house in which Mrs. Lundy died was laid more than one hundred years ago. The house is close to the old Lundy homestead, in which stands the grandfather's clock brought to this country 140 years ago by William Lundy. The clock still runs.

Mrs. Lundy's fame as a knitter was nation-wide. When Canada first entered the war she joined the little band of women who worked under the name of the Lundy Lane Willing Workers. One day the president of the workers brought Mrs. Lundy a supply of yarn and knitting needles. She thought it would keep her busy for weeks; but in a few days she received several pairs of socks and a request for more yarn. From that time on Mrs. Lundy was kept supplied with yarn, and in four years of the war she knitted one hundred pairs of socks a year.

Men in training at Niagara Camp learned of her ability as a knitter, and many of them walked from the camp to her home to have her knit them socks. As an actual fact, what this simple implement accomplishes is a matter of surprise to one who sees it in operation for the first time."

The rod cultivator is not intended for use when there is plenty of moisture in the soil, because under such conditions a disk or ordinary cultivator produces better results. The time to use the rod cultivator is when the soil is dry for several inches down, in which condition the ordinary implements would powder the surface to a dangerous extent where soil drifting is likely to occur. The rod cultivator, on the other hand, has a tendency to bring small lumps to the surface, where they have a beneficial effect so far as preventing drifting is concerned.

A ROD CULTIVATOR.

Dry Farming Implement Devised by Alberta Farmer.

An implement that can at times be put to good use on any dry land farm is the rod cultivator, devised and used by Mr. C. S. Noble, of Nobleford, Alberta, and described by W. H. Fairfield, of the Dominion Experimental Farms, who points out that although this practical weed destroyer will not replace the duck-foot cultivator there are many times when it can be used to better advantage on the summer-fallow, which is the secret of successful dry farming.

"The necessity of summer-fallowing every year, one-half or at least one-third of the cultivated area on each farm represents the difference between dry farming and ordinary farming," says Mr. Fairfield, and he explains that the best results from summer tillage under the dry farming system can be obtained by ploughing the land in May or June, before vegetation such as weeds or volunteer grain has had a chance to grow sufficiently to exhaust the soil of an appreciable quantity of moisture. This cultivation must be given from that time until frost time in the autumn to prevent all growth of vegetation if the maximum amount of moisture is to be saved.

The above treatment is calculated to moisten the driest subsoils to a depth of from three to six feet from the surface, and is satisfactory so long as the humus content of the land is not too greatly reduced.

The chief drawback to long-continued practice of this kind of soil treatment is the fact that the root fibres become exhausted, with the result that the soil becomes subject to drifting, and it is with a view to overcoming this tendency that the rod cultivator was devised by Mr. Noble, whose land is situated in the Chinook belt, where land is apt to be bare of snow during the greater part of the winter.

The principle of the rod cultivator is to have a rod of five-eighths inch round tool steel pass through the soil about six inches below the surface. This completely cuts or rather rubs off all weeds, but in the operation does not pulverize the surface. It would a disc or even a duck-foot cultivator. The object of using a rod in place of a wide, flat piece of steel like a knife is that any kind of blade collects particles of roots and trash, and does not clean properly, while in the case of the rod, the pressure is so great on its under side that the trash, etc., is worn off. As an actual fact, what this simple implement accomplishes is a matter of surprise to one who sees it in operation for the first time."

The rod cultivator is not intended for use when there is plenty of moisture in the soil, because under such conditions a disk or ordinary cultivator produces better results. The time to use the rod cultivator is when the soil is dry for several inches down, in which condition the ordinary implements would powder the surface to a dangerous extent where soil drifting is likely to occur. The rod cultivator, on the other hand, has a tendency to bring small lumps to the surface, where they have a beneficial effect so far as preventing drifting is concerned.

Barley Is Good Feed Crop.

Barley has now been grown nearly so widely as the yield per acre in pounds of feed would justify, and it is feared that the loss of the milling and home market may reduce the acreage still more. From the standpoint of farm economy, the barley acreage should not be reduced below the need for farm feed. Barley is a good feed grain for all classes of live stock. In the northern States it yields more pounds of feed to the acre than any of the other small grains. It yields best on well-drained soils. It does not respond well on lands that are wet or lands that are sandy. On favorable soils the farmer would do well to maintain his barley acreage, especially if he has live stock to which he may feed it. It will give a generous return in feed and at the same time fit into almost any rotation. It also lends itself readily to the management of the farm, as in many localities it can be seeded later than spring wheat and thus use farm labor to good advantage.

Honey Wanted.

Information reaching the Canadian Trade Commission from England points to a great demand for honey. Beekeeping has been seriously interfered with throughout the British Isles by the inability to get suitable labor during the last three years, and through the extreme restrictions on sugar for winter feeding of bees. It is pointed out that the opportunity for the increased production this year will, therefore, be unequalled. Last year's crop in Canada approximated eight million pounds, and considering the mildness of the winter and the demands which have been made for new hives, it is not unreasonable to expect an increase of 5 per cent. should the weather in the next few months be fairly good and open. Producers may be assured of good prices.

Feed Grain for Finishing.

Farmers substituting pastures entirely for grain and other concentrated feeds to their market hogs through the summer will find that, before marketing in the fall, it will be advisable to feed grain to harden the soft fat and meat and put on additional weight. Light but steady grain feeding on pasture, however, gives better results than a heavier feeding during a shorter finishing period.

Geese Raising Profitable.

When playing the poultry-raising game, if you are not situated to make a success of chickens, try raising geese. They are far easier raised, less expensive and for market will bring almost double the price in the same length of time.

Canada's Debt.

Canada's debt is now about two billion dollars, of which three-fourths are held in Canada itself, one-sixth in Great Britain, and one-twelfth in the United States. Canada is now practically independent in a financial sense. The bulk of the debt is from the Canadian people to that section of it which invested in bonds during the war.

A Sad Case.

The lieutenant was lonesome for a familiar face. Seeing a chap who looked like the boy who used to deliver groceries at his home, he stopped him and asked: "Do you know who I am?" "No, sir; don't you?"

"Just can't work any more." The faded, faded, over-worked woman, with pains here o t h e r e, should ask her neighbor for advice. Ten-to-one she was dragged down by the pains and ailments of her sex, and was completely cured by that temperance tonic made from wild barks and roots, and known for 50 years as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. When a woman complains of backache, dizziness or pain—when everything looks black before her—when a dragging feeling, or bearing-down, with nervousness, she should turn to this "temperance" herbal tonic, known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It can be obtained in almost every drug store in the land and the ingredients are printed in plain English on the wrapper. Put up in tablets or liquid. Dr. Pierce, of Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., will send a trial size for 10-cents.

TOSCORO, Ont.—" Dr. Pierce's Medicine has been a wonderful help to me and I recommend it in hope that others may be benefited by its use. When I was a girl I was always delicate. My mother thought she could never raise me. As I got older I grew worse; doctors said I would have to have an operation. I suffered at times untold agony. My mother started giving me 'Favorite Prescription,' and it finally cured me of all my trouble. After I married I used it again. My children are all healthy and strong. This medicine did wonders for me, and me much suffering, and I can highly recommend it to weak women." Those making it a family."—Mrs. A. M. Ross, 113 Tecumseh Street.

CARE IN HANDLING MACHINES.

Annual Loss Due to Lack of Good Shelter.

A certain farm-equipment dealer has one record customer who buys a new binder every three years, and who at one time was in debt for three binders which he purchased in a period of seven years. This farmer uses a ready-made apple tree as a shelter for his grain harvester. When one tree rots he plants another. And then he and his family work hard, he is always paying last season's debts with next year's income. Why isn't he successful?

Don't Wait Until the Last Minute to See That Implements Are In Good Working Order.

If the agricultural implements which have rusted and rotted to pieces in fence corners and barnyards could be placed end to end, they would probably stretch from here to infinitum. Approximately $100,000,000 constitutes the annual loss on the continent of North America due to lack of care in handling farm machinery—a tribute to catch-as-catch-can methods. The average farmer will sit up all night to save the life of a day-old calf or a litter of pigs and think nothing of it, yet the same man will begrudge the time and labor necessary to haul valuable tools from the fields to proper shelters.

Accredited Herds.

In view of the agitation in Canada for the establishment of accredited herds, it is interesting to note what is being done in the United States along this line. The twenty-five veterinarians of the United States Department of Agriculture who are in the field doing tuberculosis eradication work, together with an equal number of state men, have tested approximately five hundred pure-bred herds and found them free from the disease. The owners of these herds have been given an official certificate, stating that they have tuberculosis-free accredited herds. The veterinarians also have given one test to two thousand herds preparatory for the accredited list. The owners of all these herds, together with the breeds and number in each herd, will be listed in a publication soon to be issued by the Department. Figures show that during the past eight months, or since July 1, 1918, three hundred accredited herds and one thousand herds that have passed one test have been added to the list. The veterinarians now have under supervision 1,200 herds of pure-bred cattle and six hundred herds of grades which have shown by previous tests that one or more animals have tuberculosis. The publication lists one thousand one hundred owners of grade cattle which have successfully passed the requirements for tuberculosis-free accredited herds. It is estimated that this disease causes an annual loss of $25,000,000 in the United States.

Fruit Growing of Benefit.

Fruit growing is often spoken of as being the "greenest" of agriculture. It has long been claimed that it requires more knowledge, more care and more skill in general than ordinary farming, such as the growing of crops.

But where is the horticulturist or fruit grower for home use only who is not also a good general farmer? It seems that fruit growing is of benefit to the general farmer for the knowledge he uses is also required for crop growing.

Boys and girls usually take an interest in fruit growing and will learn if encouraged. There seems to be something fascinating about growing good fruits. And every farmer who has an abundance finds that this is largely responsible for the pride and the satisfaction the children take in the farm and its environment.
